The fragment must belong to an enclosed shape, since it is not glazed on the reverse. The reserved areas of the obverse are a redder colour than the natural clay of the reverse. The fragment appears to preserve part of the lower pattern border of the figure scene, one saltire cross and one meander square, and, above, something which could possibly be the leg of a chair (?).
The colour of the clay is unusually brown.

This fragment is of especial interest for its polychrome decoration. On the red clay are laid red, white and yellow paint. The fragment seems to show part of a hanging bunch of drapery. The drapery is white, but the folds are shown in yellow, producing an effect of 3d and of light and shadow. There are also traces of black glaze, and of washes of yellow, and orange.

The thickness of the fabric and the unglazed reverse suggests it belongs to a large, closed vessel.

Description: Glaze in very good state. There are some small chips. Glaze was applied very evenly everywhere except on the ring foot. John Hayes says this is an early example of an iridescent black glaze. Ware about which very little is known. There are examples of this found at Corinth, and some experts believe it is Etruscan. The black glaze has an iridescent quality. The medallion stamp is on the inside of the bowl in the center. There are 4 stamps within the feathered medallion border, equally spaced around a small circle. The 4 stamps are identical, and J.H. says that these later developed into name stamps of the potters. He does not think this is a name stamp, which <sup>would</sup> mean that this is probably an early example of this ware type.

There are 2 rim sherds, 2 body sherds, and the ring foot base with the medallion on the inside.

Condition: fragmentary, slightly eroded, otherwise good

Description:

Clay colour:- Munsell 5YR 7/4 pink

This very thin walled cup has a flattened base and walls which curve in very slightly at the top.

The fabric possibly preserves traces of black glaze on the outside, at least in a band around the rim.

Its delicate fabric and small size suggest this may have been a volute vessel.

Description:

Clay colour:- Munsell 5YR 8/4 pink.

This fragment has black glaze both inside and out. The glaze is thinly applied and dull. The fragment probably comes from a small bowl or skyphos. The pattern decoration has been in part missed and in part shown with added white. It consists of an ivy leaf chain - the stems are missed, the leaves originally painted white, but now faded.
